

Frank. D. Millet, whose painting, The Love Letter, had much to do with bringing him a commission from the trustees of the Boston Public Library to decorate that building, may be looked upon as Sheldon's predecessor as an American war correspondent for an English paper. Millet is now one of the best known American painters, but in the Russo-Turkish war he was the special correspondent of the Daily News. For this fine work he received the Roumanian Iron Cross, and the Order of Chevalier St. Anne and St. Stanislas from the Russian government. Millet spends much of his time in England, and lives near Abbey, in Gloucestershire.
